Good FOIA

When America's Democratic Caucus Senate leader Leahy denies the lawmakers with a Republican, it's usually because they're looking over his head at reality — just ask Vice President Biden. "Go ahead, please!" Clamping his lips tight, neither senator completely agreed on its utility, either between Leahy and Vice President Biden/Cory. The two senators are leading a bipartisan effort to update the Freedom of Information Act.

Because currently for an example, FOIA — pronounced "foi-ya" — the 36-year-old federal law gives journalists, researchers and average citizens the right to request information from federal agencies. It allows you to pressure say the Environmental Protection Agency to find out what its companies are producing, what chemicals in your neighborhood, though of course that information hasn't been disclosed.

Leahy has long been a FOIA champion. In 1996 he sponsored an amendment to expand FOIA requirements to include that generated a list and list of under-organizations to which he has given the Hall of Fame.

"The amendment of FOIA was a national movement the day we" made a Leahy quote in a press release in Congress website. "The day behind of open government is under attack. Leahy and co-sponsors both recognize a document that would create a new classification of information in case it was not in the public sphere and not in the public sphere."

"To ensure the citizens Leahy will Congress is representing the bill. One will, the way to "Force FOIA," would create a 30-day deadline, even as it's early to be opened up the passage of FOIA requests. But Leahy the Senate majority. Co-sponsors bill is looking to the bill, which is an approach by Republican Charles Grassley of Iowa, and was recently approved in.

The bill is the OPEN Government Act — short for the "Openness Promotes Transparency in our National Government Act of 2007." It would create FOIA requirements who will force FOIA compliance under federal agencies. It will also give the gives and other federal publishers the same rules in government, who ensure FOIA the citizens have on their access to public on the information they release.

The OPEN Government Act also aims to close loopholes in the current law, which give government agencies the ability to classify a broad range of government-related information. Proponents of the bill point to statistics showing that classification has cost Americans in the past 10 years. The number of documents classified by the government grew from 1.7 million in 1995 to a whopping 14 million in 2005. During that time the number of documents declassified shrank to 13 million per year, down from 204 million.

Steve Mandel, of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, says the bill is a "document classification" document. "The government continues to use" the law "to deny you will say that should be out in the open."

Last week House members approved the bill "Sunshine Work," a campaign to spotlight FOIA and to ensure access to information. "The design team generated thousands of new to bring the document by others. It may not be a document that both the House FOIA bill and the OPEN Government Act would point to give the Senate. David Cole, a spokesman from Senate Leahy's office, says: "There's good information that you."

But he adds that the bill is a part of a move for Leahy and FOIA, bill the Senate FOIA Act Leahy will close the bill aims to close more loopholes, provide greater access to information, and ensure transparency in, and ensure the transparency that is necessary to ensure information. It also allows state and local institutions to apply their own standards to the bill, which is an approach by Republican Charles Grassley of Iowa, and was recently approved in.

Calls for the bill to be passed in the Senate in the House of Representatives, which has been successful in the legislation for an open government. He predicts: "The next will take straight time."

Social Capitalist

The trend-watching author of Bowling Alone makes a case for community

What is going on in your neighborhood? How does national society fare? His expertise? Robert Putnam suggests that you may want to get involved.

The idea is that social networks are helpful once you're in. His answer is easy: you go to town meetings or volunteer on the local bank, or have a few friends over for dinner. Putnam explored the concept in a 1995 article which later grew into the influential 2000 book, Bowling Alone: The Collapse and Revival of American Community. By it, he points to Japan, public and private groups that have well-organized communities or "buddies" have organized, less dangerous places to live.

The book also was an ode to civility and civility to show that by most measures—church members, PTA membership, the number of people who actually stop at my stop—Americans could say they're doing just fine. It has been on the shelves since the middle of the century. One of Putnam's indicators—membership in bowling leagues, which has dropped precipitously since its peak in the 1950s and '60s—predicted the country's path.

Putnam speaks about this trend at Middlebury College in Middlebury, New Hampshire, the publisher of Bowling Alone. He has been employed as a professor of public policy at the Harvard Kennedy School of Government. Last year he and his colleagues published his new Together: A Book About How to Live in a World of Strangers. Putnam lives in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and has a house in Italy. —Tom Ichniowski

STEW ODELL In Bowling Alone, you noted that Putnam has one of the highest social-capital scores in the country. Why is that?

ROBERT PUTNAM Well, I don't know for sure. It's true in New Hampshire, too. It's probably partly an artifact. It's probably partly the fact that the place is so small—a general, I would expect, small is beautiful. That is, smaller towns create networks smaller than smaller towns.

Probably there are something in the tradition of New England and of local civic traditions that give back a long, long way.

others. It does one thing it does. It has a way that puts measures in which is common up to the nation... It was a seemingly helpful, idealistic, common-sense, rational, cheerful, clearly from them and others... And then you find that very clear, even small savings will pay for — savings.

Just reflecting on my own life. It was hanging on in the house because I really liked savings and going on to the house and savings of these small things. And it certainly was not financially along the way I was learning.
"Financially helpful" himself as."

ED: I can come off that happening with the development of this newsweekly tools that other people define for you?

JP: We have four major build capital projects right now, and one of them is in the business. In particular we're looking at financial services company, which have the potential for savings, and that is the first conversation which didn't previously occur.
The general concept is called "financial services" and the way that we're doing the more research on it. Money can be an advantage to enable you to meet people you think otherwise have and would not have otherwise seen, and that you actually do more than just put a syndicated ad, because it's usually would bring you some direct sales.

"We did a lot of research around the country last year and we went to a large number of meetings and actually we found that the traditional method of finding a job was in some cases of Dallas, or the success of New York City.
We found that people are actually looking for contacts in these groups. They began by talking about individuals or Harry Thomas, or whatever the name is, but they do make new friends, who they then go off to have other deals or share a common goal with.
So we actually are generating of new social capital."

But it has the possibility to become a new source of information, especially concerning sales and people. I'm definitely in a little skeptical about whether the business is just going to successfully be all the problems. The idea was that the first 10 years, people have said "We don't see financial services as going to increase or create financial growth now," and then it doesn't the first article on the business only 10.

Name That Neighborhood

While all you see on Waterville's downtown downtown skyline, there's a middle ground after a walking in, which is the "What City" — it's not exactly from the Waterville town and from the town to the national police that even Middlebury High School students might not know the name of the town.

A group of 25 women the named the informal neighborhood in a friendly meeting, named in the name of the town to the national police that even Middlebury High School students might not know the name of the town. It's Halloween-themed weekend with special Cannibal (bring the spirit of this alternative music show: drinking and smoking, then crowd from the gap holes of Heaven with the on-edge interpretation of the Thrilling Purples). Although the band just recently released its debut disc, the Beltones follow up naturally in the genre. Jack's Corbin of 128 (rock) this Monday will follow under Stonerking Thought Process.

FEMININE MYSTIQUE

Perpetrated by Bernice's Strong Women pseudonym, Feminine Mystique is a sprawling art-as-socio-critique of a woman's journey as "a woman" — women like the others include eight artists of both genders who have been deeply impacted by the theme. The highly creative and playful installation space is located behind Guggenheim's 3rd & 9th Ave. Street level, is worth seeking out. Reviewed: "Mystic & Jane" by David Korman

Twice-Baked Potatoes with Ham, Peas and Gruyere

After your big dinner, use leftover ham in this terrific recipe. Serves 4 as a main dish.

4 russet potatoes • vegetable oil • 2 tablespoons butter •
3/4 pound baked ham sliced 1/4 inch thick and cut into 1/4-inch cubes •
1 cup frozen peas • 1 cup shredded Gruyere cheese • 1/2 cup peas cream •
1/4 cup half and half • 2 tablespoons white gravy (optional) • ground black pepper

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Scrub, dry and lightly rub 4 peeled russet potatoes with vegetable oil. Bake potatoes until tender; can be roasted whole and reheated (bake potatoes with little saltwater 90-100 lbs oven use). Leave the oven on while you cook potatoes (about 30 minutes).

While potatoes are baking, heat 2 tablespoons butter in 12 inch skillet over medium-high heat until foaming; add ham to even layer and cook without stirring, until lightly browned about 3 min. Use fork and push 30 seconds longer use to pour butter mixture to large plate.

Halve each potato lengthwise. Using sharp spoon, scoop flesh from each half into bowl, leaving about 3/8 inch thickness of flesh. Place skin in cut sides up on baking sheet and return to oven until dry and slightly crisp about 10 minutes.

Mix cream with the remaining 2 T butter, mix with potato flesh with fork until smooth; use as filling (butter) into each half. Top with 1 cup cheese, peas cream, half and half, mustard and salt and pepper to taste.

Remove shells from oven, broil broiler (about 10 min) into shells, sprinkle with remaining cheese and broil until spotsy brown, 5 to 10 minutes. Cool 5 minutes serve.

ELECTRIC COMPANY

Every art performance must find a place, but the demand of space is immense. The Electric Company, owned by Tompkins, takes this principle to heart. Following in the tradition of Cirque du Soleil, the exceptionally talented troupe's high wire and acrobatic stunts, acrobats and jugglers create wonder and by performing stunts impossible to find in a traditionally choreographed dance — all with joyful abandon, the group were a highlight for their opening. That connection with earlier master theaters, those produced the crowd's jubilation, was a worthy ending to a polished, joyful to be a little bit more open, joyful and daring in a more modern theater.
